Danielle,

I have copied staff on this email regarding the access easement.

They will get back to you with clarification.

Thank you,

Rachael,

Thank you for the information. I am in need of some direction, as I am unsure of how to comply with comments 1 & 2 from the review comments, in regards to the access easement.

A record of survey cannot typically grant an easement, as this should be done through a separate easement document. However, the client (Stewart) owns both parcels and it has always been my understanding that you can't grant an easement to yourself. Is there a recommended process for completing these requirements so that we can move forward? While I can do some of the dedications on a plat, this being an exempt process would not afford me some of the options that I would have with a subdivision that I am aware of.

Some of the possibilities we have thrown around include:

1. Review of the plat certificate to identify if an existing easement exists that will benefit parcel no. 337936. While there are many easements through his property that benefit others, I am doubtful this will come up fruitful. However, I am wondering if comment #1 means all access easements recorded or just the ones to benefit the other parcel

2. Prepare an access easement legal description for the client to obtain an easement and have that recorded at the County. Then we can show this AFN and identify it on the map.
3. Include the language of the access easement on the survey that should be included in a subsequent sale of the property, if or when that occurs.
4. Other?

Thank you for your assistance.
